The author compared eight agencies that had adopted person-centered services, to a greater or lesser extent, for individuals with disabilities. Her goal was to determine the types of contextual factors within an organization that would either enhance or limit the provision of person-centered services. Data was collected over a 2.5-year period and focused on the question, "What is associated with the proportion of person-centered services that an organization provides?"